     I, Sam Peacock, have decided to work on my own for the senior design capstone project. I have decided to make a personal portfolio website; I have wanted to make one for a long time, but never got around to doing it, this seemed like a great time to start it. My current plan is to display the previous projects I have worked on, as well as go over any previous work experience, as well as have links to my resume, Github, and Linkedin.The website itself would also serve as living proof of my skills and a way to show off what I can do. I'm planning on using C++ for the backend of the website and C# for the front end, as those are languages I have used in the past and am familiar with.

     As I am working on my own, I do not have to set up any specific times to meet with a team, but I do plan on working on the project weekly once development begins. Since I am the only one working on the project, I will be in charge of every aspect of the project. I am confident I will be able to produce meaningful work and end with a product I will be proud of.
